Intelligence Chief Dulles To Give Talk

Allen Welsh Dulles, chief of the Central Intelligence Agency, will address the annual meeting of the Dallas Council on World Affairs in the Baker Hotel on Oct. 23, Executive Director Glen G. Costin announced Wednesday.

The younger brother of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles heads the agency from whose information the President and Cabinet officers shape United States policy.

Allen Dulles, 60, is a graduate of Princeton University. He was in the United States diplomatic service from 1916 to 1926, spending most of the time on assignments in Europe including commissions for world disarmament. Then he joined the New York law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell with which his brother was associated.

During World War II, he served with the Office of Strategic Services, the cloak and dagger outfit headed by Gen. William (Wild Bill) Donovan, who spoke to the council some months ago. (His brother, Secretary Dulles, talked to the council a year ago.)

While in the OSS in Switzerland, Dulles learned from an anti-Hitler German intelligence officer of the German underground's plot to assassinate Hitler. He could not persuade the Allies to support the underground, but did rescue the officer—Hans Gisevius, who lives in Dallas now and who helped obtain Dulles as a speaker.

When General Eisenhower became President, he chose Dulles to direct this country's intelligence-gathering agency.

Costin said the dinner meeting would be open only to the 1,600 council members and their guests, but memberships still are available.

In addition to the CIA chief's speech, Costin will report on the council's activities and officers who will be elected.
